MANUAL OF CNC ENGRAVING MACHINE

A CNC device is, in essence, a tool programmed to receive and interpret designs from a computer and thereby guide a cutter - usually a router bit or a laser. The machine often resembles a rectangular table fitted with two parallel tracks running the length of the surface (the X-axis). Along these tracks rolls a third, perpendicular track (the Y-axis) on which the cutter is mounted.

Laser vs CNC Mill Precision. One of the most contributing factors to a laser purchase is the speed compared to a CNC Mill. A trotec laser is at least twice as fast as a router for most applications. A laser is able to cut thick material in one pass, where as a CNC Mill will need to do multiple passes to cut the same thickness.
